Ohio Inventor to Exhibit “The Calendar Clutch” at America’s Largest Invention Show

PITTSBURGH... InventHelp’s INPEX®, America’s Largest Invention Trade Show, announces that Charles Beyer from Columbus, OH, has invented a unique and innovative way to display a calendar. This patented invention will be exhibited at INPEX® 2010, June 16-18, at the Monroeville Convention Center in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

“The Calendar Clutch” eliminates all of the negative aspects of hanging a calendar the old-fashioned way. It is unique in its function and offers endless possibilities through interchangeable decorative theme plates consisting of sports, holiday or floral designs. These plates attach onto the front of the calendar clutch by simply dropping its hanger onto a slot.

This invention allows a user to effortlessly remove the calendar over and over without ever fussing with a tack, magnet or tape. Returning the calendar to the clutch is simple and leaves the calendar hanging straight and level every time, causing no wear and tear.

“When people use a calendar, it’s usually one they get for free or one they purchase that displays their favorite sports team or character in a movie. Since I use a calendar every day and it’s out in the open, I wanted something to express who I was while the calendar hung in my home. With my invention, I don’t have to worry about the pages drooping or tearing and can continue to display my interests through the calendar,” said the inventor.

Mr. Beyer is exhibiting at INPEX® with the hopes of finding a manufacturer, distributor and venture capital.
