Kentucky Inventor to Exhibit “Ladder Spurs” at America’s Largest Invention Show

PITTSBURGH... InventHelp’s INPEX®, America’s Largest Invention Trade Show, announces that Clarence Wilmot from London, KY, has invented a safety device to be used on a ladder. This invention will be exhibited at INPEX® 2010, June 16-18, at the Monroeville Convention Center in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

“Ladder Spurs” prevent an individual from sliding while on a ladder. While working from a high level on the ladder, this invention would provide a safe and secure feeling to an individual. According to the inventor, construction workers, home owners, tree trimmers and farmers would benefit from Ladder Spurs.

Made of solid steel, this device eliminates the need for assistance while working on a ladder. Ladder Spurs are lightweight, durable and attach to the ladder and fasten in place. This invention is currently available for $29.99.

“I was in the middle of working from a ladder and all of a sudden, it gave out and I almost fell to the ground. I was scared because I use a ladder quite often and this had never happened before. I thought that there needed to be a way for me to maintain balance on a ladder in order to accomplish a specific task at hand,” said the inventor.

Mr. Wilmot is exhibiting at INPEX® with the hopes of finding a venture capital and importer/exporter.
